

Once upon a time there was a boy named Ted. He wore a sweater that was blue and lived in Canada. One stormy evening Ted and his family were out to dinner at Red Robin. They were having a great time and eating tasty hamburgers. When they went back out to their car, it wouldn't start. Ted's dad said, "I don't know what's wrong but it just won't start!" Ted's mom replied, "Did you leave the lights on again?" "No!" said Ted's dad. No matter what they did, they couldn't start the car. Just then, Ted noticed that there was a hotel across the street. "Hey Dad, Let's stay at that hotel over there," said Ted. "That sounds like a great idea," said Dad. So the family checked into the hotel. They went up to their room and Ted and his family realized that they had nothing with them. After they got in the room, as usual, the sister and brother were fighting. The parent soon separated them and soon Ted was napping, mom and dad were watching television, and the sister was reading a book.

The next morning, the family went downstairs to have breakfast. When they got in the restaurant, Ted and the family all wanted water. After the water came, the waiter asked what they family wanted to eat. Everyone shouted, "Pancakes!" The waiter came back with tons of pancakes. After everyone was done eating, they went back to the room. One of the dad's work mates came and repaired the car and they drove home.